Reasons for Registration

The former Social Security Office, Castletown, is included in the Protected Buildings Register for the following reasons:

ARCHITECTURAL INTEREST:

- The building's external envelope is thought to date from the early 19th century, and includes its War Office identification stone. The property's subterranean structure may include evidence or elements of a defensive outwork called the 'New Worke', part of the Castle's defensive enhancements constructed during the 17th century.

HISTORIC INTEREST:

- Much of the building's external envelope dates from the 19th century and from its use as a Military Library. The building also has a historic unity and historic functional relationship with the Castle and Castle Arms (Glue Pot), providing a Group Value illustrating important aspects of the nation's military history.
