description

Bridge House, Bridge Street, Castletown.

The four storey rectangular building backs onto the estuary at the entrance to Castletown harbour. The pitched slate roof is masked by a parapet wall extension of the main walls. To the front on Bridge Street the facade is cement rendered as is the north gable. The other two walls however are faced with vertically hung slates. All of the window openings in the building are rectangular with the vertical dimension being slightly larger on the middle two floors than the upper and lower floors. The main entrance is marked by a small columned porch direct onto the limited pavement. There is a rectangular three storey extension on the southern wall.

No interior examination has been carried out.

The building does not appear to be in a good state of repair.

recommendation

The building would not seem to have any merit other than through its historical associations with former owners and their activities such as smuggling. Although such associations have interest it is not felt to be sufficient to warrant listing this building for preservation unless such listings are to become widespread throughout the island.
