REGISTERED BUILDING PROPOSAL

History

The properties date back to the 1870's when Victoria Street was created as the latest thoroughfare in Douglas. Victoria Street was designed in order to connect the developing parts of the upper town with the sea terminal. It cut through the narrow streets of old Douglas, much of which had to be demolished in the process.

Architectural Interest

Exterior

Numbers 22, 24 and 26 Victoria Street, Douglas are three fine examples of high Victorian architecture with elevations modelled above Ground Floor in Italianate detailing. In terms of the streetscape and in comparison with its neighbours, the facades are generally of higher quality than their neighbours of the same period.

Flat pilasters with a raised central panel divide the overall street frontage into individual building bays, which in conjunction with the ornate fenestration to First and Second Floor bestow a strong vertical emphasis. The plain stringcourse between Ground and First floor level and an ornate cornice line above Second Floor enriched with dentil bracketry, provide the classical base, middle and top.

The painted timber sliding sash windows are grouped in threes in the raised render panel. The window surrounds are ornately modelled with fluted pilasters from which spring embossed roman arches to the First Floor and shallower arches to the Second Floor. Each arch head is in turn capped with a keystone.

The masonry remains of the faux balconies held aloft by scrolled brackets and now sadly missing their ironwork, project from the façade between First and Second Floor.

The Third Floor is set behind an elaborate pierced parapet punctured by a pair of round arched headed dormers continuing the vertical emphasis of the building to roof level.

No. 22 retains the same architectural treatment as its taller neighbours although in a two-window format, but steps down. This has the effect of terminating the terrace and enabling the terrace to turn the corner further enunciated by chamfering the façade.

Due to the fact that the properties in question are relatively old, original drawings have not been found. There are many other properties on Victoria Street with a similar style and many others with the same corncicing detail. The corncicing design appears to have once continued over the whole length of the street.

Several Victorian buildings have been replaced with modern buildings on Victoria Street and the balance of Victorian Buildings to modern buildings is about 80% to 20%. However the majority of the modern buildings are much larger and have a greater impact on the streetscape than the ratio suggests.

Landmark Qualities

Although the properties are not landmarks in their own rights, they are an important part of the streetscape and their removal would harm the character of the area.

Group Value

When Victoria Street was first created in the 1870's these properties were built as a group in the original style of the street.

Age and Rarity

The age of the buildings is appropriate for this area of Douglas as there was much development here in the late 19th century, around the time when Douglas became the Island's capital.

Recommendation

This buildings are recommended for inclusion on the list of Registered Buildings particularly for their architectural interest, that is to say, the quality of their façade and the contribution the buildings make to the group value of Victoria Street.

Dear Mr Humphrey

Re: RB 224. 22-24 Victoria Street, Douglas.

At a meeting held on the 25th February 2005, the Planning Committee considered an application to de-register the above property.

Following consideration of all the submissions made in response to the Public Notice, together with the report of the Conservation Officer and having noted the contents of the Independent report from The Morton Partnership, the Committee resolved that the remaining fabric does not warrant registration and consequently the Planning Committee has agreed to de-register the building.

Under section 11 of the Registered Buildings Regulations 1991, you may within 21 days of receipt of this notice, by notice in writing to the Department, appeal to the Minister against the said decision.

Yours sincerely

Jo Callow
Secretary, Planning Committee.
