Records of HM Customs and Excise (UK) concerning the administration of the Isle of Man Decennial Tests

1910-1962

Alternative/previous reference numbers: C198

Accession number: A63

Extent: 1 archive box (8 folders; 20 sheets; 1 volume and loose inserted papers)

Description of series:

Working papers of HM Customs and Excise (UK), including the Accountant and Comptroller General's department. The records were created during administration of the Isle of Man Decennial Tests to determine the Isle of Man's share of customs and excise revenues under the Common Purse arrangement. The series includes papers relating to the Decennial Tests undertaken in the years 1922-1923, 1934-1935, 1951-1952 and 1961-1962.

The content of the records varies between each year, but the series includes correspondence, typescript test results, notes and tables of calculations. The series also includes some returns from merchants and retailers in the Isle of Man for the 1951-1952 Decennial Test and typescript Isle of Man Government circulars relating to the 1934-1935, 1951-1952 and 1961-1962 Decennial Tests.

Administrative History:

A 'Decennial Test' to calculate consumption of customs dutiable goods on the Isle of Man is carried out every 10 years in order to determine the Isle of Man's share of the Common Purse for customs revenues. The arrangement for the sharing of indirect taxes between the UK and the Isle of Man dates back to the Revenue Returns Act passed by Tynwald in 1894. The current Customs and Excise Agreement between the UK and the Isle of Man (at the time of cataloguing) was passed in 1979. For each test year, returns of imported goods were submitted by merchants and retailers. These were compiled to calculate the total amount of wines, spirits, tobacco and other goods subject to customs duty consumed in the Isle of Man during a single year. The results were then applied for 10 years to determine the Island's share of the customs and excise duties on these items.

Description of series: Correspondence and working papers of the Isle of Man Government Office concerning the Decennial Test (to calculate consumption of customs dutiable goods) undertaken in 1961-1962 in order to determine the Island's share of the common purse for customs revenues.

Administrative History: A 'Decennial Test' to calculate consumption of customs dutiable goods on the Isle of Man is carried out every 10 years in order to determine the Isle of Man's share of the Common Purse for customs revenues. The arrangement for the sharing of indirect taxes between the UK and the Isle of Man dates back to the Revenue Returns Act passed by Tynwald in 1894. The results were then applied for 10 years to determine the Island's share of the customs and excise duties on these items.

Custodial History: Records in S31 originally formed part of the Government Office subject files sequence. They were passed on to the Economic section of the Isle of Man Treasury (later known as the Economic Affairs division) who took over administration of the 1981-1982 and subsequent Isle of Man Decennial Tests.

Records in S31 were stored in Iliam Dhone House, Douglas by the Treasury. When the Economic Affairs division of the Treasury moved to the Policy and Strategy division of the Cabinet Office it also moved premises to the Government Office. At this point the records were appraised and selected for permanent preservation.
